When you are planning to take steps to address problems at work, there may be many issues that workers are facing. It can be helpful to focus on a few priorities.

Here are some questions to consider as you pick your priorities or the first problems to address.

Think about problems that:

- Present the most serious hazard-- things that could cause serious illness, injury, or death
- Workers care about the most
- Affect the most workers
- Are most common or frequent
- Can be solved most easily or quickly
- Violate the law, such as Cal/OSHA standards or public health standards
- Can be addressed with existing funds and other resources
